

“Type II Conditional” Practice Page

Model: If I were a school designer, I would use Corning Glass!

Directions: Fill in the blanks to complete the following Type II Conditional forms.

1. If I were Superman, I would _____.
2. If I were an engineer, I would _____.
3. If I were a chef, I would _____.
4. If I were visually impaired, I would _____.
5. If I were a programmer, I would _____.

Directions: Imagine the following text is a script that Suzie Trunzie is going to turn into a YouTube video for a school project. She does not want to include errors that make her video look very unprofessional. Circle Suzie’s errors below (there are comma and conditional form errors).

To be a sports superhero..... (A sporty biography of my friend Nino)

If my friend Nino was smarter he would go to practice more. Not only would this show commitment it would also help his game. If Nino was a better teammate he would pass the ball a little more often. Everyone wants to be a star (and Nino is good!) but how will his teammates improve if they never feel the pressure of making a shot during a real game? If Nino was a better planner he will think about his academics as well as his fitness. Brains are important for the court as well as the world. With 60% of athletes bankrupt within 6-years of retirement, brains are essential for survival! If I was a true Nino fan I should be honest with him about these things. You can do it, Nino!